3 — Good Health & Well-being

According to the WHO report of 2020, Household air pollution was responsible for an estimated 3.2 million deaths per year in 2020, including over 237 000 deaths of children under the age of 5. Household air pollution exposure leads to non-communicable diseases, including stroke, ischaemic heart disease, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), and lung cancer.

Women and children, typically responsible for household chores such as cooking and collecting firewood, bear the greatest health burden from using polluting fuels and technologies in homes. It is essential to expand the use of clean fuels and technologies to reduce household air pollution and protect health. These include liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) that meets the emission targets in the WHO Guidelines.

7 — Affordable & Clean Energy

Ensure access to affordable, reliable, and sustainable LPG energy for all.

13 — Climate Action

Take urgent action to combat climate change and its impacts. Reduce deforestation by supplying LPG as a substitute for wood-fuel in rural and urban areas of Tanzania.

5 — Gender Equality

We employ women. We provide practical skills training for women. And indirectly, when women use LPG in their households, they do not have to waste time fetching firewood and, thus, more time engaging in other entrepreneurial businesses.
